WHAT IS SOCIAL SECURITY DISABILITY?

The Social Security Act provides two benefit programs for disabled persons: Social Security Disability (SSD) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI).

Social Security Disability

Social Security Disability is available to individuals who have contributed into a Social Security account. These individuals earn "quarters of coverage" based on their contributions. To meet the required number of quarters, an individual usually must work five (5) out of the last ten (10) years. There are some allowances for younger persons who have not had the opportunity to work that long.

Supplemental Security Income

Supplemental Security Income is a need-based program for individuals who are not covered by the SSD program. These benefits are determined based on individual income and assets. The standard in determining whether an individual is disabled for this program is the same as the SSD program.

Who is "Disabled?"

To be eligible for either of the above benefits, an individual must demonstrate that they are "totally disabled". This means they must prove they have a physical or mental impairment (or a combination of impairments) severe enough to prevent them from performing substantial gainful activity (any regular paying job) for at least twelve (12) consecutive months.

The requirement is not whether an individual would be offered a job, but whether there are jobs available, which they could perform. There are certain allowances for individuals of advanced age allowing for a more realistic look at age, education and experience in meeting this test.

SOCIAL SECURITY CLAIM PROCESS

The Application

To begin a Social Security Claim, an individual must file an application with the Social Security Administration. Our staff will help in the preparation of that claim and explain the process in detail. It is important that the application is thoroughly completed with the appropriate information.

The Denial

Unfortunately, an individual should expect that their application will be denied. They should not be discouraged as the vast majority of these claims are denied at the initial application. It is imperative that an individual who truly feels they are disabled appeal this decision within sixty (60) days of that denial.

Request for Hearing

If an individual is denied, they are entitled to request a hearing before a Federal Administrative Law Judge. It is very important during this appeal that the individual's medical records be thoroughly compiled and organized. They should be presented to the Administrative Law Judge in a clear and concise way, highlighting the appropriate Social Security regulations.

The Hearing

The hearing is the most crucial stage of the appeal process, but there is no need to be nervous or apprehensive about it. The Administrative Law Judge who presides over the hearing will take testimony under oath but in an informal manner. This is a private hearing usually held in a small hearing room with only the Judge, the hearing assistant, the claimant's attorney and the claimant attending.

All the medical records that have been submitted will be admitted into evidence and testimony will be taken of the claimant concerning the alleged conditions and limitations the individual may have in the work place. Occasionally, the Judge may call in a "vocational expert" to testify about the possibility of training an individual for a different job.

The Administrative Law Judge must be given a clear picture of not only an individual's diagnosis, but also of the limitations they are suffering with. It is important that the Administrative Law Judge understand that in certain cases, an individual may be able to suffer through one day of work, but would not be able to hold down employment five days per week.

The Decision

The Administrative Law Judge will not announce a decision at the hearing. A written decision will be sent usually within four (4) to six (6) weeks. If the decision is favorable, the claimant will normally begin receiving benefits a short period after. If the decision is not favorable, an appeal to the Appeals Council must be filed within sixty (60) days.
